[7 September 2011]: As Australian businesses look to ensure they're appropriately managing travel risks, from natural disasters to unexpected manmade events, Travelscene Corporate Members have found a niche in supporting their clients – wherever they may be.

David Padman, General Manager of Travelscene Corporate, Australia's largest group of premium independent travel management companies, says while the unexpected happens, Travelscene Corporate is responding with a view to improving preparedness and reducing travel risk even further.

"This is yet another advantage Australian businesses have when working with Travel Management Companies (TMCs) and, in the spotlight of recent events – from Libya to Japan – our clients are resting easy.

"Our Members have systems in place to tackle risk-related issues, inform their clients when something happens, react immediately, and proactively find solutions."

Mr Padman reiterated Travelscene Corporate Members' commitment and duty of care with their existing clients and their efforts with third parties to coordinate approaches and streamline communications policies, so that all areas are covered, all of the time.

"While our Members always prepare their clients for travel, the reality is that travel disruptions will continue to happen", Mr Padman said.

"Good forward planning and simple advice before any trip around customs and culture, health alerts and political situations, can help to mitigate risk."

"Our clients want to limit any negative effects that travel interruptions may have, and it is because of this that we continually identify areas of improvement in order to enhance our risk-management services."

Travelscene Corporate is Australia's largest group of premium independent travel management companies and winner of Australia's Best Travel Agency Group 2006, 2008 and 2011. Each year, our Members help deliver travel solutions to over 2 million travelers and provide expertise to Australia's leading businesses, large and small. www.travelscenecorporate.com
